

PETITE HISTOIRE.

THE languid wind was sighing between the wavelets.

Some persons pronounce it "sowing" and others "suffing."

But no matter.

He, the muchly eligible parti from a material point of view, stood sur la plage.

Plage sounds so much better than beach.

I only said that because I thought most of you would not know what plage meant.

A polite form of enlightenment.

Oh, dear!

But in the maldly opinion he was entirely impossible.

Except on account of his wealth.

Small, weak-eyed, anemic, opposed to all forms of exercise, he was hardly the type of individual to find his milieu among the brawny armed Hebes of the shore.

Milieu sounds so much—(This padding has got to stop.—Ed.)

Oh, very well.

He stood beside an ambitious mother, whose Junoesque daughter was disporting in the water far from shore, performing stunts which might have driven Annette Kellerman wild with rage.

Whether 'twere premeditated or no I have no means of discovering but of a sudden the symmetrical amphibian (Gee, that's good) uttered a piercing shriek of "Help! help!" and disappeared beneath the surface only to reappear and reiterate her cries for assistance.

The hysterical and gasping mother turned to her companion.

"Do you not hear my daughter crying for succor?" she imperiously inquired.

"Yes, but I ain't one," he replied as he turned and made his way back to the hotel.

Which proved that he was not such a fool as he looked, although even this fact has not rendered him additionally popular among the residents.

—The Scribe.

"Stop tickling me, Adam," cried Eve.

"Surely I have a right to tickle my own rib," replied her facetious spouse.

WHERE THE SMART SET DINES.

The very acme of epicurean perfection has been reached at Maxim's cafe, under the Kenyon hotel where Mr. E. L. Wille presides as host to Salt Lake's best diners. In addition to serving a perfect mid-day lunch the management makes a specialty of appealing to the people directly through their stomachs at all hours of the day or evening.

Helen Decker's orchestra, supplemented by Miss Beasle Dumas, and Miss Louise Tanner, soloists, is furnishing some of the best music heard in the city. An ideal place to dine one finds at Maxim's not only a delectable menu but an entertaining hour, always. The reputation of Maxim's is spreading over the continent; it is thoroughly established at home.

"The Call of the Lake"

When the summer sun makes drudgery of the work of men—and slavery of the work of women—then "the call of the lake" should be heeded.

Few people justly appreciate the wonderful gift nature has bestowed upon Utah in placing so conveniently the great inland salt sea—the wonder of all when first the unusual character of the lake is learned.

The Great Salt Lake, with its invigorating, refreshing, healthful waters, is but an hour's ride from Lake. Right now conditions ideal for bathing—the water is warm enough for comfort—cool enough to invigorate.

Then, too, the big indoor pool affords the finest kind of sport—warm water—new bath rooms—nearly all new vaults.
